It is important to understand the insurer's definitions for injury and disablement, and how these same definitions will impact the cost of insurance.

Business Travel Insurance

Group business travel insurance provides 24-hour protection to employees who are on business trips. Since the employee is travelling on business matters, there is an obligation on the part of the company to provide some level of protection. This gives recognition to the fact that employees are exposed to additional risk and possibly to the need for medical expenses exceeding the limits of a local group health plan.

Flexible Benefits

A flexible benefits programme provides the employee with greater control, allowing the employee to select from a pool of choices, to build an individualised benefits programme, with the option of modifying the benefits programme as life circumstances change.

Healthcare Insurance (Expatriates)

Expatriate health schemes cover international assignees seconded to overseas locations. The demand for expatriate health insurance exists because local medical facilities, particularly in less developed countries are either unacceptable or not readily accessible, due to language or legal barriers. The need to have access to advanced facilities means that it is important for the expatriate health scheme to offer comprehensive benefits, with few or none of the sub-benefit limits typically found in local schemes.

Key Person Insurance

The objective of Key Person Insurance is to compensate a business for loss of profits as a result of the death, critical illness or disability of an employee due to sickness or accident. Key Person Insurance provides protection against loss of profits/revenue or new business that may have been secured by the key person. Key Person Insurance also covers for the loss or disablement of highly specialised employees, whose skills may be integral to business operations.

Voluntary Benefits Programmes

Many employers offer employees discounted access to personal insurance including medical, travel, personal accident or even household and motor insurance. We assist in developing such schemes and implementing with selected insurance partners.
